Your speakers for the day are:-

David Mitchell a former Headteacher, now Freelance Consultant and Google Certified Teacher. Known to most as @DeputyMitchell on Twitter. David introduced blogging to Heathfield Primary School in December 2009 which then saw writing SATs results soar from 9% Level 5 to 60% Level 5 in just 12 months with every Y6 pupil making 2 years progress in one year.

Patrice Baldwin has been a primary headteacher, a local authority Arts Development and Cultural Learning Adviser, an Ofsted inspector, a School Improvement Partner and a Head of Music service. She developed and directed Drama for Learning and Creativity (D4LC), an innovative national school improvement initiative involving National Drama, local authorities and more than 300 schools in England, Wales and Iceland.

Michelle Larbey aka The Phonics Fairy brings phonics to life through the enjoyment of real books. Michelle is a former Leading English Teacher and Local Authority Consultant who now spends her time as freelance consultant and Author. Having spent years in the classroom, culminating in an Assistant Head and English Subject Leader role, Michelle moved into consultancy. This move was triggered by her work on the introduction of 'Talk for Writing' which saw her case study published by the National Strategies and which she later presented nationally. Starting her consultancy work with the Gloucestershire Local Authority and later Cambridgeshire, Michelle moved to be a freelance consultant and writer. Michelle also works part-time for Cambridge University in the Faculty of Education supporting PGCE trainees in the highest standards of research and teacher training.

Norfolk Children's Book Centre will also be in attendance.
